

4 FORSAKEN GARDEN.

From The London Atheneum.

In a cleft of the cliff between lowland and highland,
At the sea-pond's edge between whinstain and ice,
Walled round with rocks as an inland island,
The ghost of a garden sits there.
A girdle of bushwood and thorn incloses
The steep square slope of the blossomed bed
Where the weeds that grew green from the graves of its rests lie dead.

The fields fall southward, shriveled and broken,
To the last east edge of the long lone land.If a step should sound or a word be spoken,
Would a ghost not start at the strange guest's hand?
So long have the gray boughs walls half quiet,
Through branches and briers if a man make way,
He shall find no life but the seawind's, restless
Night and day.The dense hard passage is blind and stilled,
That crawls by a track none turn to climb
To the strait white place that the years have rifled
Of all but the thorns that are touched not of time.The thorns he severs when the rose is ripe,
The rocks are silent when he wastes the plain.
The wind that wanders, the weeds wind-shaken,
These remain.Not a flower to peest of the foot that falls not;
As the heart of a dead man the seed-pods are dry;
From the thicket of thorns whence the nightingale calls
not.Could she call, there were never a rose to reply.
Over the meadows that blossom and witherBlossoms but the note of a swan's song;
Only the sun and the rain come either

All year long.

The sun burns sore and the rain dishevels
One faint, bleak blossom of countless breath.

Only the wind howls and revs

In a room where life seems barren as death.
Here there was laughing old, there was weeping,

Haply, of loves none ever will know;

Whose eyes went seaward a hundred sleeping
Years ago.Heart fastened in heart as they stood, "Look thither," Did he whisper. "Look forth from the flowers to the sea;"For the foam flowers endure when the rose-blossoms Wither.

And men that love lightly may die—but we're

And the same wind sings and the same waves whitened,
And or ever the garden's last petals were shed.In the lips that had whispered, the eyes that had lightened,

Love was dead.

Or they loved their life through, and then went whither!
And were one to the end—but wind end who knew?

Love deep as the sea as a rose must wither.

As the rose-red seed that mocks the rose,
Shall the dead take thought for the dead to love them?

What love was ever as dead as a grave?

They are loveless now as the grass above them

On the wave.

All are at one now, roses and lovers,
Not known of the cliffs and the fields and the sea.

Not a breath of the sun that has been hovers

In the air now soft with a summer to be.

Not a bough that thus sweeten the seasons hereafter

Of the flowers or the leaves that laugh now or weep,

When as they that are free now of weeping and laughter

We shall sleep.

Here death may not again forever;

Here change may come not till all change ends.

From the graves they have made they shall rise up never,

Who have left enough living to ravage and rend.

Earth, stones, and thorns of the wild ground growing,

While the sun and the rain live, these shall be;

Till a fair wind breath upon all these blowing

Roli the sun.

Till the slow sun rises and the sheer cliff crumble,

Till the ferns and meadows the deep gulls drink,

Till the strength of the waves of the high tides humble

The fields that lesson, the rocks that shrink.
